

DEDICATING SPACE FOR HOME OFFICES AND VIRTUAL LEARNING SPACES

Working Remotely While Your Kids Learn From Home

There's no doubt that this year has proven to be a challenge for just about everyone. Between travel restrictions, online learning requirements, and increasing prevalence of working remotely, we're spending more time than ever in our home.

Many of us have had to improvise over these past few months, converting existing spaces in our living rooms or kitchens to serve as ad-hoc offices or classrooms for ourselves and our kids. Separating work and home life can prove to be difficult in this environment, as time spent at work begins to blur together with home activities throughout the day.

Spaces Well-suited for Work and School

While many people have had a difficult time making the transition to working remotely, we have designed our floor plans to help ease the burdens of working or learning from home. Each of our semi-custom floor plans include a variety of options to accommodate remote workspaces.

Providing each member of your family with a distinct workspace helps alleviate distractions, establish boundaries, and provide a greater level of organization. When you're in your office, it's time to focus on work. When you close the door or leave the room, you're back at home. Working from home definitely makes for a short commute!

So what types of spaces do Demlang Homes have to offer the remote learner or telecommuter? We're glad you asked!

Flex Rooms

When it comes to flex space, anything is possible! Whether you need space for a music room, a virtual classroom, or a place to hold your Zoom meetings, this oasis is exactly what you need to succeed! Pictured above is the Flex Room found in our customizable Brooklyn model.

Pocket Offices

With just enough space to work as a great online classroom, The Dawson's pocket office provides a quiet atmosphere for students or virtual meetings. It just so happens that The Dawson's pocket office is adjacent to the kitchen, so there are plenty of opportunities to grab a quick snack before you send out your next report!
